Investigate Bush's link with CREEP

In February 1980, during the Bush campaign for the presidency, Bush was reported by The New Statesman (Feb. 22) to have said in an interview in the Los Angeles Times that he could envisage a nuclear exchange between the Soviet Union and the United States. He is also reported to have said that in such an exchange, about five percent of Americans would survive - enough, he claimed, to declare that the US would win.

This five-percent solution is a dangerous and reckless concept, and if he still believes it, he should be held accountable for it now.

The same article also reported that Bush may have used an illegal $6,000 cash donation from Nixon's CREEP fund to help in his senatorial campaign in Texas. Finally, The New Statesman reports that he was responsible while at the CIA, for the diversion of agency funds from a rebel force in Angola to President Mobutu in Zaire, an interesting connection to the Iran-contra affair if it is true.

I am as concerned as some Globe columnists about the absence of intense scrutiny by the media of George Bush's past political activities. Scrutiny by the press of both candidates is an essential part of the campaign process. Yet, I do not see it happening.
